DIED FOR A BETTER LIFE

Once upon a time, a caravan traveled across a desert. There were five hundred merchants in the caravan. The desert was like a vast ocean of sand. It was extremely hot during the day and freezing cold at night. The sand stretched as far as the eye could see, and there were no rivers or lakes. The only sources of water were the oases, small green islands amidst the dry sand. To secure water, the caravan traveled from one oasis to the next. The caravan traveled with camels, which, unlike people, do not need frequent water.

One day, the caravan took longer than usual to reach the next oasis, and they ran out of water. When the caravan reached a mountainside, the young leader said, “The next oasis is over the mountain, but we need to feed the camels now. Please be patient. There's grass here, so let's dig and see if we can find water.”

Some people started to feed the camels while others began to dig.

They dug and dug, but no water appeared, leaving everyone disappointed. Then someone shouted, “Gold!” He had found gold instead. The group was overjoyed and forgot about their thirst as they resumed digging. An enormous amount of gold seemed to be buried underground.

The leader, having ensured the camels were well-fed, said, “Everyone, let's move to the oasis before it gets too late.” He worried about the time needed to reach the next oasis and the impact of water scarcity on their health. The situation was critical and could become fatal without water. However, no one listened, continuing to dig for gold, sweat dripping down their faces. The leader shouted, “Come on, everybody! Let's go!” but his warnings fell on deaf ears.

You can imagine what happened to the people in that caravan. Buddha taught that clinging to our possessions, no matter how little, isn't true contentment. In this story, the people, driven by their desires, drowned in their own ocean of greed and ended their lives tragically. They died in pursuit of a better life, believing that wealth would bring them fulfillment.

Buddha said, “True contentment is wealth.”

Dancing Moggallāna

As we enter June, it's the Obon season. There are several Obon-related stories that I love, and I'd like to share one of them with you.

Once upon a time, when Shakyamuni Buddha was in India, there was a disciple named Moggallāna. He gained transcendental power through serious Buddhist practice and became well-known for it. Moggallāna's mother was also respected for her intelligence, but after she passed away, she was reborn as a hungry spirit because of her karma, specifically the sin of greed (attachment to things that bring us pleasure). This might be surprising since she loved her son from the bottom of her heart and acted as a good mother.

In the realm of hungry spirits, all beings have large bellies and thin bodies. They are constantly starving with insatiable appetites, but when they try to eat, the food turns into flames, leaving them desperate.

Moggallāna was deeply sorrowful over the loss of his mother, and upon learning about her rebirth, he felt even more despair. Despite being able to see her suffering with his transcendental power, he couldn't find a way to help her. Moggallāna went to Shakyamuni Buddha for guidance. The Buddha declined simply, saying, "I am sorry, my friend, but no one can substitute for her since she brought this upon herself."

Moggallāna continued returning to the Buddha, insisting, "She is my only mother, and I would rather lose my life than not help her." Seeing his disciple's sincerity, an idea came to the Buddha. He tasked Moggallāna with overseeing a flawless food donation to the Sangha during the rainy season retreat, ensuring faultless conduct among the sacred monks.

The Buddha gave Moggallāna this challenging responsibility, requiring him to oversee everything 24 hours a day, seven days a week, throughout the month. He perfectly fulfilled the precepts.

During his assignment, Moggallāna began to realize that his supposed pure love for his mother was still rooted in his ego-centered mind. His mother was also strongly attached to him while she lived, because she loved him so much. It was also true that she didn't show as much care for other children as she did for Moggallāna.

One day, Moggallāna realized that he had never experienced true love. He gradually understood the essence of suffering caused by desire and pleasure. After a month of selfless giving, he fully grasped the truth of his self-attachment and felt released from it. He then transferred his virtue to his mother and saved her from the realm of hungry spirits.

Moggallāna felt ultimate happiness. Suddenly, his body began to move on its own. He started dancing wildly with excitement. It is said that Moggallāna's joyful dancing is the origin of the Bon Dance.

The Buddha guided Moggallāna to a higher level of awareness. Moggallāna learned the true meaning of the act without seeking anything in return through the Buddha's guidance. The Buddha said, "If you genuinely try to save someone, first and foremost, you must be saved."

In Buddhist teachings, salvation means awakening the deluded to the truth and guiding them to enlightenment. Serving food, which the Buddha assigned to Moggallāna, is recognized as one of the most difficult practices in the Buddhist tradition. However, no practice cannot be undertaken without the Buddha's guidance.
